Preface

This directory is the result of the diligent work of Shawn Campbell, a Kerr Center food policy intern. It is comprehensive and builds on the work of others such as Robert Waldrop of the Oklahoma Sustainability Network, the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food, and Forestry, and others who are in close contact with growers across the state. We have made every effort to ensure the accuracy of the data, but in such a dynamic environment, we cannot guarantee every single listing.

The purpose of this document is several-fold. First there is a demand for local food from public institutions and consumers-- perhaps greater than we realized. This demand needs to be satisfied or it will simply go away. Our experience tells us that satisfying this demand can be profitable for those who are willing to adjust their production and marketing programs.

There are a number of farmers in our state willing and able to service some of that demand. This directory lists farmers, where they are located, and what they produce. Consumers and public institutions wanting to buy local may wish to contact farmers in their area.

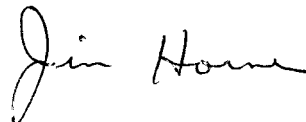

In this publication you will also find listings of schools that have expressed interest in buying local produce. Farmers and institutional food buyers need to understand each other's needs in order to have viable long term success in putting local foods in our schools.

It is quite gratifying to find that "local foods on local tables" can become a reality. Many people want to help farmers remain on their land, restore rural communities, help children to connect with their community, and enjoy the fresh taste and nutrition of home grown food.

It is the mutual goal of Kerr Center and the Oklahoma Food Policy Council to begin developing a framework to link farmers with schools and consumers demanding local food. We hope to develop pilot projects to make this happen. We look forward to watching the Oklahoma economy grow, particularly in rural communities, through the increased use of locally grown foods and locally made, value added products.

We thank the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food, and Forestry, and the Risk Management Agency of the USDA for their assistance to the council. In addition, we are finding other partners every day. We invite you to help us make a difference on our farms and in our schools.

Sincerely,

Jim Horne, President, Kerr Center
and Co-Chair, Oklahoma Food Policy Council

Introduction

The backbone of Oklahoma's rich heritage has always been the family farm, but due to consolidation and depressed prices, today's family farms are disappearing at an alarming rate. On October 16th, 2001, a group of Oklahomans charged by Oklahoma's Commissioner of Agriculture set out to reverse the course of this epidemic. Citing an opportunity to benefit Oklahoma farmers by opening new markets, the Oklahoma Food Policy Council was formed. The council is a joint project of the Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture and the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food, and Forestry.

One of the council's first actions was to conduct a survey of food service managers at 638 Oklahoma institutions: public schools, colleges and universities, vo-techs, state resorts, correctional facilities, and state hospitals. The survey polled managers about the foods they serve and whether they and their institution would consider buying locally grown food. Survey results indicated that 54.5% are interested at this time in connecting with local food producers. Of these, 77% were willing to share their names with area producers; one hundred twenty nine of these were schools. The survey and results are part of a new publication, The Oklahoma Farm-to-School Report 2003.

With the survey completed, a project was begun to link local farmers in Oklahoma to local buyers. The goal was to develop both a database of state schools willing to purchase from local sellers and a database of agricultural producers who would like to sell to schools. This publication incorporates this information into a directory of producers and the crops that they grow, which may serve as a "buyers' guide" for area schools. It also contains a directory of schools that indicated through the survey they might be interested in buying locally, and are willing to be contacted by farmers. It is believed that both schools and farms can benefit from the project; new markets will be opened up for farmers, while institutions will be able to quality, locally produced foods at competitive prices.

The producer information in this directory was obtained from a number of sources: the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture's Made-in-Oklahoma program, Robert Waldrop's Oklahoma Foods website, the Oklahoma Food Cooperative Organizing Committee, Oklahoma Farmers' Markets' Alliance, Oklahoma State University Cooperative Extension Service (Tulsa County), and the Texas - Oklahoma Watermelon Association.

We also received information from individual farmers' markets and the directory includes lists of sellers at these markets: Collinsville, Jenks, McAlester, Muskogee, Norman, OSU – OKC, Tulsa-Cherry Street, and Shawnee. In addition we received information from individuals who read about the project in their local newspaper or on internet list serves such as the Oklahoma Sustainability Network and New Okie Pioneers.

We would like to thank all of these sources for their cooperation and assistance.

Before publication, we attempted to contact producers via mail or phone and gave them the opportunity to correct information or to choose not to be included in the directory. The information found in the directory is true and accurate to the best of our knowledge, but is subject to change without prior notice. We encourage independent verification.

The directory is an ongoing project and will be online at the Kerr Center website www.kerrcenter.com. Updates will be made periodically. To be included, go to the website or call the Kerr Center.

We are also assessing the feasibility of a farm-to-school pilot project in Oklahoma. To that end, we are gathering names of farmers who might like to be part of a marketing alliance or participate in a pilot project. To be included contact the Kerr Center by phone or fax, or go to our website.

How to Use this Directory

FARMS

This list of producers is organized by county, city, and farm. In addition, the list is divided into sections, such as a fruit, vegetable, grain, and nut farm section, and a meat, fish, egg, dairy, and honey farm section.

The producer list includes the contact information for each farm in the directory, and the items grown (if this specific information was supplied). Farms are organized by county and town.

An asterisk (*) denotes produce grown organically. Organic produce can also be found in a later section. A ∞ denotes farms with websites; addresses can be found in a following section.

This directory does not claim to be complete; it is an ongoing project that will be updated from time to time. To be added to the directory, visit www.kerrcenter.com.

CROPS

This section provides a list of producers for each product grown, organized by county and town. The contact information for a particular farm can then be located in the farm list. A list tallying the number of farms growing different crops is also given.

The harvest calendar in this section includes produce from each growing season in Oklahoma and the time of the year harvested. It is not an all-inclusive list of produce grown but is meant to be a good representation of a possible year-round production farm. The chart can be used by buyers to plan purchases.

Not included in the calendar is meat, fish, dairy, or egg production; adding these items to a farm's enterprises would provide income during the seasons with little produce.

DIRECTORY OF INSTITUTIONS

The directory of institutions lists institutions that have expressed an interest in buying local produce from farmers. We ask that institutions only be contacted by farmers in the area, and that they only be contacted once unless otherwise suggested by the institution. The institutions include public schools, colleges, correctional facilities, technology schools, and state resorts. The directory of institutions section is formatted the same way as the farm list, with county, city, school, and contact information. This format makes comparing an area's farmers to schools interested in buying local, a simple task.

DEMAND/SUPPLY

There are two parts to the demand and supply section-- the first is a map of Oklahoma. This map contains two numbers for each county; the top number is the number of institutions that expressed interest in buying locally grown produce. The bottom number is the number of farms listed in the directory selling local produce. An "X" through a county denotes no known supply or demand.

The second part of this section is a side-by-side list of counties grouped into geographic sections. On the left side is the number of institutions per county with an interest in buying locally. On the right side is the number of farmers per county listed in this directory. Subtotals are by geographic location.

This section helps to give a visual idea of the areas of Oklahoma that have a strong demand and a correspondingly strong supply. The section also helps locate areas where more work should be done to find both more demand and supply.

SOURCES

This section lists the sources of the information listed in this directory. Key sources were websites, farmers' markets, and the Oklahoma Institutional Food Survey. One source, the Made-In-Oklahoma program's website (www.madeinoklahoma.net), is maintained by the marketing division of the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food, and Forestry. Another important source was Robert Waldrop's Oklahoma Foods site at www.oklahomafoods.org.

OKLAHOMA FARMERS' MARKETS

This section lists each farmers' market that is represented in the survey and the farmers participating in those markets, as well as contact information for each farmers' market in Oklahoma.

OKLAHOMA FOOD POLICY COUNCIL

This section answers frequently-asked questions about the council, which is a joint project of the Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture and the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food and Forestry.

Oklahoma Food Policy Council: FACT SHEET

What is the Oklahoma Food Policy Council?

It is a group that advises the Oklahoma Commissioner of Agriculture on food policy. It is a joint project of the Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture and the Oklahoma Department of Agriculture, Food, and Forestry (ODAFF). The group meets periodically in Oklahoma City.

What exactly is a food policy?

It is any decision made (or not made) by a government or institution, which shapes the type and cost of foods used or available, influences the opportunities for farmers and employees, or affects the food choices available to consumers.

Do other states have food policy councils?

Such councils have been established in six states. The first was established in Iowa in 2001, with Drake University agricultural law professor Neil Hamilton as its chair. Since then, Hamilton and Drake have assisted in the creation of food policy councils in Connecticut, North Carolina, Utah, New Mexico, and Oklahoma.

Who are the members of the Oklahoma Food Policy Council?

Fifteen Oklahomans representing diverse groups with an interest in Oklahoma's food system make up the council. Current members represent farming and ranching, food processing, retail foods, education, and the media; as well as tribal, conservation, religious, and anti-hunger organizations. Key staff from the ODAFF and the Kerr Center assists members.

When was it established?

The council was established on October 16, 2001, by then Agriculture Commissioner Dennis Howard at the Kerr Center's Bringing in the Sheaves symposium on hunger, farming and the fairness of the American food system. The council enjoys continuing support from the Commissioner/Secretary of Agriculture Terry Peach.

Why was it established?

- To broaden the discussion of issues beyond simply agricultural production to a more comprehensive, food system-wide examination

- To provide an opportunity for a focused examination of how state and local government actions shape the food system
- To create a forum in which people involved in all different parts of the food system and government can meet to learn more about what each one does and to consider how their actions impact other parts of the system.
- To improve nutrition and the provision of nutritional information throughout Oklahoma
- To create an infrastructure within the food system which will better connect stakeholders such as food producers, consumers, communities, food processors, marketers, and government agencies, including those agencies which may also be consumers
- To improve the economic status of Oklahomans involved in the food system by creating new opportunities, increasing profitability and ensuring that food dollars stay close to home through local processing, enhanced distribution, direct marketing, diversification of products, and distribution of information regarding presently under-utilized opportunities.

What can a food policy council do that is not already being done somewhere is government?

- A food policy council can bring to the table a broader array of interest and voices, many of which are not typically asked to be involved when farm and agriculture policy is discussed.
- A food policy council can examine issues— such as hunger in the state, the nutritional well being of citizens, and how to increase purchases of locally grown food— with fresh eyes.
- An FPC can employ a more comprehensive approach to analyzing issues, which recognizes the interrelation between different parts of the food system and the need to coordinate and integrate action if policy goals are to be achieved.

What has the Oklahoma food policy council accomplished so far?

For its first project, the council examined the potential for increasing the amount of Oklahoma grown and/or processed foods purchased by public institutions in the state. A survey of institutional food service directors was devised and mailed to 638 institutions in the following categories: public schools (85%), colleges and universities (5%), correctional centers and state hospitals (6%), technology centers (2%), and state resorts (1%).

The ensuing report— The Oklahoma Farm-to-School Report contains a full analysis of the answers as well as an examination of the importance of increasing local consumption of locally produced foods. In addition, a Farm-to-School directory has been completed which contains information about Oklahoma food producers and what they grow, along with information about farmers markets, schools interested in buying locally, and a harvest calendar.

Thanks to the Iowa Food Policy Council for some of this information.

About Shawn Campbell

Shawn Campbell was a summer 2003 intern at the Kerr Center for Sustainable Agriculture. He attends Oklahoma State University, majoring in Agribusiness. He plans to graduate from OSU with a Bachelors of Science in Agriculture Sciences and Natural Resources in May 2004. He plans to further pursue a graduate degree in Sustainable Agriculture.

At Oklahoma State, he is a member of Phi Kappa Phi, Golden Key, Alpha Zeta, and National Society of Collegiate Scholars Honors Societies. He is also an active member of the Agricultural Economics club Aggie-X.

Shawn has been interested in agriculture and rural communities all his life growing up on ranches both in Northern California and Oklahoma. His future goals are to manage his ranch in south central Oklahoma as a sustainable system, and to find alternative marketing opportunities for both himself and other producers in the state of Oklahoma.
